Transgenerational transmission model of the addiction problem: A clinical case report

Cassandra Borges Bortolon

Clinic Psychologist, Family and Couple Therapist, Specialist, MSc, Health Science PhD
AFINet Trustee

Transgenerationality

It consists of processes transmitted from one generation to another that is repeated through family patterns, in spite of the family members not realizing it.

It is characterized by legacy, values, behaviours, beliefs, secrets, rites and myths.

The transgenerationality remains present throughout the family's history.

The Therapeutic Process

Psychotherapy for 9 months

Weekly

Psychiatrist treatment for 3 years

Medications: Bupropion, Naltrexone and Lamotrigine.

Cleber a clinical case report

Moving Forward

Supporting Cleber to return and maintain his learning process (behaviours, thoughts, actions and family relations) within a "virtuous circle": quit drinking, have a healthier relationship with his girlfriend, and continue good performance in his job.

Continuing Cleber's psychotherapy with Systemic Therapy to explore more connections among individual, familiar and social aspects.

Moving Forward

Regardless, Cleber has acquired more knowledge and comprehension about his family legacy in a transgenerational transmission model of the addiction problem: alcohol intake and hyperactive sexual behaviour.

Finally, it is important to stimulate all of Cleber's FMs to engage in specialized treatment for addiction problems.
